Christina Mercado

A loyal but overwhelmed user

Christina is having an especially busy Friday. She wants to find a great place for tonight, but she doesn't have time to research a venue. She's frustrated that the current selection process cuts into her enjoyment.

Our process

Here's how we approached this project.

01

Searching for pain

We are always looking for little signals: the annoying, the frustrating, the could-be-better.

02

Living that pain

Once we discover a problem, we embrace it. This involves getting away from the computer and talking to people in their own environments.

03

Connecting the dots

We gather data to pinpoint the problem's exact what, when, where, how, and why.

04

Next steps

Armed with insights and data, we start to explore solutions that'll make the experience better.

Show investors you understand the size of the opportunity

- + TAM is the total global market
- + SAM is the realistic portion you could serve
- + SOM is what you're going after right now

This is a data slide

Explain what this data is about and why your audience should care.

Showing well-founded data and explaining its relation to your idea can help convince even the most skeptical listeners, but it's often helpful to provide the source, mention how and when you measured this, or the sample size.

A GLOBAL SPORT WITH MOMENTUM

Over 87 million active racket sports enthusiasts generate unprecedented global participation, driving an exponentially growing multi-billion dollar market ripe for digital transformation, automated court line calling, and smart performance tracking technology.

Tennis participation has grown 24% over the last 3 years, accelerated by new formats like Pickleball and Padel.
